19 MEMORANDUM OPINION

20 BOGARDUS, Judge.

21 {1} The State appeals the district court's grant of Defendant Maria Christine 22 Garcia's motion to suppress evidence obtained, pursuant to a search warrant, on the 23 grounds that the affidavit for the search warrant was not supported by probable

24 cause. The State argues that the district court erred in granting Defendant's motion

1 by not limiting its review and analysis to the contents of the affidavit, and because 2 there was probable cause within the four corners of the affidavit. We agree with the 3 State and reverse the district court's grant of Defendant's motion to suppress for lack 4 of probable cause, and remand for further proceedings.

5 BACKGROUND

6 {2} On July 20, 2017, the Cibola County Magistrate Court issued a warrant for 7 the search of a camping trailer in Grants, New Mexico. The magistrate court issued 8 a search warrant based on an affidavit prepared by a Grants Police Department 9 officer (the Officer) from information provided by a confidential informant (the CI).
10 The affidavit stated that while on patrol, the Officer identified and arrested the CI 11 due to his outstanding arrest warrants. During the search incident to arrest, the 12 Officer found a syringe and a baggie containing a brown tarry substance. When the 13 Officer asked the CI about the baggie, he answered, "[I]t's heroin, I'm not going to 14 lie to you." A field test of the substance confirmed the substance as heroin.

15 {3} The CI further told the Officer he had just bought the heroin from someone 16 by the name of Rudy Gallegos who had a large amount of heroin at his trailer, that 17 he had been at the trailer "every other day" to buy heroin, and that he had used heroin 18 there on "multiple occasions." Another officer later informed the Officer that there 19 was high traffic volume at the property described by the CI. Included in the affidavit 20 is a statement that the CI is "a reliable source and has been involved in several 1 narcotics investigations that led to narcotic seizures and arrests.” The affidavit also 2 states that several arrestees informed the Officer that Gallegos was a “dealer” who 3 was “pushing mad weight.”

4 {4} The search warrant described the trailer to be searched and its location. The 5 trailer was located on the property of a brown stucco house with a front door facing 6 south. The affidavit also specified the types of narcotics, paraphernalia, firearms, 7 and ammunition to be seized. The officers served the warrant on the day it was 8 issued, seized evidence, and arrested Defendant and a person named Rudy Gonzales.

9 {5} The State indicted Defendant for six drug related offenses, and Defendant 10 moved to suppress evidence obtained from the search on the ground that the affidavit 11 did not support the magistrate’s finding of probable cause to issue a search warrant.
12 After a hearing, the district court granted the motion to suppress. [RP 91-93] The 13 written order states, “[The] CI is now deceased, . . . [the] CI never mentioned a 14 woman in the residence,” Tomas Rudy Gonzales was “[twenty-eight] years older 15 than Rudy Gallegos,” and the CI was at the residence “every day for the last [thirty] 16 days.” The order further states that “[s]uch set of facts is incompatible with the 17 requirements of the Constitution of the United States and that of the State of New 18 Mexico.” The State appeals.

1 DISCUSSION

2 I. Standard of Review

3 {6} “The Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution and Article II, 4 Section 10 of the New Mexico Constitution both require probable cause to believe 5 that a crime is occurring or seizable evidence exists at a particular location before a 6 search warrant may issue.” State v. Williamson, 2009-NMSC-039, ¶ 14, 146 N.M.
7 488, 212 P.3d 376 (alterations, internal quotation marks, and citation omitted).
8 “Probable cause to search a specific location exists when there are reasonable 9 grounds to believe that a crime has been committed in that place, or that evidence of 10 a crime will be found there.” State v. Evans, 2009-NMSC-027, ¶ 10, 146 N.M. 319, 11 210 P.3d 216. For a search warrant to be valid “the affidavit must show: (1) that the 12 items sought to be seized are evidence of a crime; and (2) that the criminal evidence 13 sought is located at the place to be searched.” State v. Gurule, 2013-NMSC-025, 14 ¶ 13, 303 P.3d 838 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

15 {7} When conducting a review of a warrant, “an issuing court’s determination of 16 probable cause should not be reviewed de novo but, rather, must be upheld if the 17 affidavit provides a substantial basis to support a finding of probable cause.” 18 Williamson, 2009-NMSC-039, ¶ 1. “[T]he substantial basis standard of review is 19 more deferential than the de novo review applied to questions of law, but less 20 deferential than the substantial evidence standard applied to questions of fact.” Id.

1 ¶ 30. “[T]he reviewing court must determine whether the affidavit as a whole, and 2 the reasonable inferences that may be drawn therefrom, provide a substantial basis 3 for determining that there is probable cause to believe that a search will uncover 4 evidence of wrongdoing,” but this standard “does not preclude the reviewing court 5 from conducting a meaningful analysis of whether the search warrant was supported 6 by probable cause.” Id. ¶¶ 29-30. When making this determination “we do not 7 reweigh the evidence or draw our own inferences in determining whether probable 8 cause exists. If the inferences drawn by the magistrate logically and rationally flow 9 from the facts set forth in the affidavit, we defer to those inferences, even when 10 reasonable inferences to the contrary may be drawn.” State v. Gonzales, 2003-11 NMCA-008, ¶ 14, 133 N.M. 158, 61 P.3d 867.

12 II. The District Court Erred in Considering Information Outside the Four 13 Corners of the Affidavit

14 {8} The State argues that the district court erred in considering information that 15 was not contained in the four corners of the affidavit. The State specifically points 16 to the district court’s consideration that the CI was “now deceased,” as well as 17 information about Tomas Rudy Gonzales being “[twenty-eight] years older than 18 Rudy Gallegos.”

19 {9} When conducting a review of a warrant, “an issuing court’s determination of 20 probable cause . . . must be upheld if the affidavit provides a substantial basis to 21 support a finding of probable cause.” Williamson, 2009-NMSC-039, ¶ 1. When 1 reviewing for substantial basis the reviewing court is “limited to the four corners of 2 the search warrant affidavit,” Id. ¶ 31, because of the “explicit command in our New 3 Mexico Bill of Rights that ‘no warrant to search any place’ may issue ‘without a 4 written showing of probable cause.’” State v. Haidle, 2012-NMSC-033, ¶ 16, 285

5 P.3d 668 (quoting N.M. Const. art. II, § 10). However, this limitation does not mean 6 that the reviewing court cannot draw reasonable inferences from the contents of the 7 affidavit. See Williamson, 2009-NMSC-039, ¶ 29. When making a probable cause 8 determination “[a]ny information that was not provided to the issuing judge at the 9 time the search warrant affidavit and warrant were presented to [them] cannot be 10 considered by the reviewing court in assessing the validity of the warrant.” State v.
11 Sabeerin, 2014-NMCA-110, ¶ 13, 336 P.3d 990.

12 {10} Here, the district court considered facts outside the four corners of the 13 affidavit. At the hearing on the motion to suppress, the district court judge stated, 14 “I’m going to grant the [m]otion to [s]uppress. I would be hesitant to do it if we had 15 the [CI] present. . . . We don’t have [a CI], he’s deceased.” The order granting the 16 motion to suppress included information that the CI was deceased, that “Tomas 17 Rudy Gonzales was [twenty-eight] years older than Rudy Gallegos,” that the CI 18 “never mentioned a woman in the residence,” and that the CI claimed he was at the 19 residence “every day for the last [thirty] days.” The first three factual statements 20 were not contained within the four corners of the affidavit, and the fourth fact—that

1 the CI had been at the residence “every day for the last [thirty] days”—was a 2 misstatement of the facts included in the affidavit. Accordingly, the district court 3 erred by considering information that was not provided to the issuing judge within 4 the four corners of the affidavit. Having so determined, we now examine whether 5 the affidavit provided a substantial basis for determining that there was probable 6 cause to believe that a search would uncover evidence of wrongdoing. See 7 Williamson, 2009-NMSC-039, ¶ 29.

8 III. The District Court Erred in Its Determination That the Search Warrant 9 Was Not Supported by Probable Cause

10 {11} “The degree of proof necessary to establish probable cause for the issuance of 11 a search warrant is more than a suspicion or possibility but less than a certainty of 12 proof.” Gonzales, 2003-NMCA-008, ¶ 12 (internal quotation marks and citation 13 omitted). In making the determination there “must be a sufficient nexus between (1) 14 the criminal activity, and (2) the things to be seized, and (3) the place to be searched.” 15 Gurule, 2013-NMSC-025, ¶ 15 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

16 {12} Probable cause can be based on “an affidavit . . . based wholly or in part on 17 hearsay provided by an unnamed [CI].” State v. Cordova, 1989-NMSC-083, ¶ 6, 109 18 N.M. 211, 784 P.2d 30. When an affidavit is “based on hearsay to support a search 19 warrant, the affidavit must show two things: [(1)] the underlying circumstances 20 showing how the [CI] obtained his information; and [(2)] the underlying 21 circumstances showing why the affiant has a reason to believe the [CI].” State v.

1 Ramirez, 1980-NMCA-108, ¶ 3, 95 N.M. 202, 619 P.2d 1246. These two 2 requirements make up the Aguilar-Spinelli test, adopted by our Supreme Court in 3 Cordova, 1989-NMSC-083, ¶ 17, and the two requirements are “often referred to as 4 the veracity . . . and basis of knowledge . . . requirements for evaluating information
5 from hearsay sources.” Haidle, 2012-NMSC-033, ¶ 17 (internal quotation marks 6 omitted). We agree with the parties that the basis of the knowledge prong is met, so 7 we limit our analysis to the veracity prong.

8 {13} The question under the veracity prong is “whether the affidavit provides a 9 substantial basis for believing the [CI].” Haidle, 2012-NMSC-033 ¶ 19 (internal 10 quotation marks and citation omitted). When considering veracity, “the magistrate, 11 from the verified facts presented to [them], must believe that the source is credible.” 12 State v. Fernandez, 1999-NMCA-128, ¶ 27, 128 N.M. 111, 990 P.2d 224. Some of 13 the ways in which a CI’s veracity may be established include “(1) the [CI] has given 14 reliable information to police officers in the past; (2) the [CI] is a volunteer citizen 15 informant; (3) the [CI] has made statements against [their] penal interest; (4) 16 independent investigation by police corroborates [CI]’s reliability or information 17 given; and (5) facts and circumstances disclosed impute reliability.” In re Shon 18 Daniel K., 1998-NMCA-069, ¶ 12, 125 N.M. 219, 959 P.2d 553 (citations omitted), 19 abrogated on other grounds by Williamson, 2009-NMSC-039, ¶ 29.

1 {14} The State argues the veracity prong is satisfied because the affidavit states the 2 CI was a reliable source who had been involved in past narcotics investigations, and 3 his statement that the baggie contained heroin was a statement against interest.
4 Defendant responds that the CI was a heroin addict who had every incentive to lie 5 to the police. We conclude the magistrate court could have reasonably concluded the 6 veracity prong was satisfied based on the CI's past history of assisting law 7 enforcement.

8 {15} Past reliable information can be an indicator of reliability. See Cordova, 1989-9 NMSC-083, ¶ 20 (finding sufficient probable cause where the CI had provided true 10 and correct information in the past). In State v. Knight, this Court found that “the 11 [a]ffidavit established the informant’s reliability by stating that the informant had 12 provided information in the past that led to a determination of probable cause for a 13 search warrant and to arrests and prosecution.” 2000-NMCA-016, ¶ 18, 128 N.M.
14 591, 995 P.2d 1033. And in State v. Montoya, this Court found that the veracity 15 prong was satisfied because “[t]he affidavit indicate[d] that the CI] had provided 16 reliable information many times in the past.” 1992-NMCA-067, ¶ 14, 114 N.M. 221, 17 836 P.2d 667. Similarly, here, the affidavit states that the CI had been previously 18 “involved in several narcotics investigations” that “led to narcotic seizures and 19 arrests.” The magistrate court could reasonably have determined from that statement 20 that the CI satisfied the veracity prong.

1 {16} Because the CI's information satisfied both the veracity and the basis of 2 knowledge prongs of the Aguilar-Spinelli test, the magistrate court's probable cause 3 determination could properly be based on hearsay provided by the CI contained in 4 the affidavit. See Cordova, 1989-NMSC-083, ¶ 6. Based on the CI's statements, as 5 well as other information contained in the affidavit, we conclude the affidavit 6 provided a substantial basis to support the magistrate court's determination of 7 probable cause.

8 CONCLUSION

9 {17} We reverse the district court's grant of Defendant's motion to suppress for 10 lack of probable cause, and remand for further proceedings.
