1 ATTREP, Judge.

2 {1} Defendant Johnny Salazar appeals his convictions for aggravated driving 3 while intoxicated (DWI), in violation of NMSA 1978, Section 66-8-102(D)(3) 4 (2016), and resisting, evading, or obstructing an officer, in violation of NMSA 1978, 5 Section 30-22-1(B) (1981). Defendant contends no reasonable suspicion supported 6 his detention and the district court thus erred in denying his motion to suppress.
7 Defendant adds that the district court erred in compelling his counsel to return to the 8 State video evidence the State had initially disclosed, and by failing to permit his 9 counsel to withdraw based on a purported conflict. We affirm Defendant's 10 convictions.

11 BACKGROUND

12 {2} In March 2015, a magistrate court jury found Defendant guilty of both 13 aggravated DWI and evading an officer. Defendant appealed his convictions to 14 district court, where he moved to suppress any evidence arising from his detention 15 on the ground that reasonable suspicion was lacking. The district court held a hearing 16 on the motion at which the arresting officer testified. The following recitation of 17 facts is based on the officer's testimony.

18 {3} On an evening in late April 2014, New Mexico State Police set up a DWI 19 checkpoint on Camino Real Road in Las Cruces, New Mexico. Camino Real Road

1 ran roughly north-south through the checkpoint. Cones and signs indicating the 2 checkpoint's presence and directing drivers to stop were placed both north and south
3 of the checkpoint. Multiple marked police vehicles, including a large state police 4 van displaying the words "state police" in "huge letters" on its sides, were stationed 5 at the checkpoint. At least two of the parked police vehicles were operating their 6 overhead lights continuously. Among the officers on duty was patrolman Oliver 7 Wilson, who was positioned furthest south on Camino Real Road.

8 {4} Just as the sun was setting, Wilson observed a red or maroon, four-door sedan 9 approach the checkpoint from the south. The car traveled north on Camino Real a 10 short distance past the intersection of Dona Ana School Road, which was visible 11 from the checkpoint. Then, roughly one hundred yards south of where Wilson was 12 stationed, the car pulled completely off the road onto the dirt shoulder "just before 13 the cones" marking the checkpoint. Wilson, with an unobstructed view, noted the 14 car lingered at the side of the road "long enough to be noticeable," before making a 15 U-turn across the double-yellow lines of Camino Real. The car accelerated, turned 16 right on Dona Ana School Road, and drove "rapidly" away from the checkpoint.
17 Wilson's radar, however, was off, and he was unsure whether the car had at any 18 point traveled faster than the posted speed limit or committed any other traffic 19 violation. Even though there were no other vehicles obstructing Wilson's view of 20 the vehicle, he could not make out a license plate or any identifying features of the 1 driver. Wilson could not recall whether the signs announcing the checkpoint would 2 have been viewable from the vehicle at any point. Wilson, however, testified that the 3 stop, pause, U-turn, and departure at a high rate of speed were uncharacteristic of 4 traffic typically approaching the checkpoint—most traffic either turned at the Dona 5 Ana School Road intersection or continued through the checkpoint.

6 {5} Wilson testified that he “suspected, from [his] experience, that there was 7 someone trying to avoid the checkpoint.” Wilson shouted to his fellow officers that 8 he had seen a “turnaround,” jumped into his patrol car, activated his emergency 9 lights, and drove off in pursuit. He made the right turn onto Dona Ana School Road 10 and re-established visual contact with the car, which was by then ahead by “quite a 11 distance.” The car next turned right on Dona Ana Road. Wilson attempted to close 12 the gap, but he was unsuccessful. As they traveled on Dona Ana Road, Wilson lost 13 sight of the car.

14 {6} Shortly after losing contact, Wilson came to a four-way stop at the intersection 15 of Dona Ana Road and Thorpe Road. He had not seen the car approach this 16 intersection, and, as a result, he had doubts about where to head next. He made his 17 “best guess” and turned right, heading east along Thorpe Road. After driving in that 18 direction briefly, Wilson noticed in his rearview mirror a maroon car parked in the 19 driveway of a duplex or triplex just east of the Dona Ana-Thorpe intersection. A 20 man stood outside the car. Wilson believed, though he did not know, that this was

1 the “same maroon vehicle” he had been pursuing. Wilson made a U-turn and 2 approached the man standing next to the car. Wilson asked the man whether he had 3 been trying to evade him, and the man conceded that he had. Wilson investigated 4 further, identified the man as Defendant, and conducted field sobriety tests.
5 Defendant performed poorly on the tests and refused to submit to chemical testing.
6 Wilson later arrested Defendant for aggravated DWI (refusal) and evading an 7 officer.

8 {7} Defense counsel did not present evidence at the suppression hearing but 9 offered to have the district court view the video from Wilson’s dashboard video 10 camera, which the court declined. Defendant argued that Wilson could not have 11 developed reasonable suspicion based on his observation of the U-turn at the 12 checkpoint and that, even if there was reasonable suspicion at the checkpoint, Wilson 13 did not have the requisite particularized suspicion as to Defendant on Thorpe Road 14 because Wilson lost contact in pursuit and guessed about Defendant’s direction of 15 travel. In ruling on the motion to suppress, the district court adopted much of 16 Wilson’s testimony in its oral findings. Specifically, the court found that Defendant 17 had traveled past the Dona Ana School Road intersection on its approach to the 18 checkpoint. Defendant had then paused on the shoulder, before making the observed 19 U-turn on Camino Real and accelerating away to “create distance” from Wilson. The 20 court added that Wilson had pursued and lost sight of Defendant’s vehicle briefly,

1 but Wilson eventually reestablished contact with and detained Defendant as 2 described on Thorpe Road. Based on those findings, the district court concluded that 3 Wilson had reasonable suspicion to believe Defendant was or had been driving while 4 under the influence. That suspicion, the district court concluded, supported Wilson's 5 investigative detention, and thus the court denied Defendant's motion to suppress.

6 {8} Defendant's case was slated to go to trial the week after the suppression 7 hearing. The day before trial, the State realized it had lost or misplaced its only copy 8 of Wilson's dashcam video. Before the magistrate court jury trial, the State had 9 provided defense counsel a copy of the video. Aware that defense counsel had 10 retained the copy, the State requested that defense counsel return to the State a 11 courtesy copy. Defense counsel declined, and the State moved the district court to 12 compel production. On the morning of the first day of trial, the district court granted 13 the State's motion to compel, ordered defense counsel to produce a copy of the video 14 to the State, and briefly adjourned.

15 {9} Returning from the recess, defense counsel renewed her objection to 16 production, contending the order to produce might give rise to a conflict as she could 17 no longer give her undivided loyalty to Defendant. The district court concluded 18 production would raise no conflict and again ordered counsel to produce a copy of 19 the video. Defense counsel complied and then moved to withdraw from her 20 representation and for a new trial, maintaining that Defendant was entitled to 1 conflict-free counsel. The court denied the motions. After Defendant was convicted 2 of both aggravated DWI and evading an officer, defense counsel renewed in writing 3 her motion for a new trial based on the order compelling production of the video.

4 The district court denied the motion, concluding that Defendant had established “no 5 substantial injustice” warranting a new trial. This appeal followed.

6 DISCUSSION

7 {10} We first hold that reasonable suspicion supported Wilson’s detention of 8 Defendant and, thus, the district court did not err in denying Defendant’s motion to 9 suppress. Next, we conclude that the district court did not abuse its discretion in 10 ordering Defendant to return a copy of the video that the State had provided to 11 Defendant in discovery and in denying Defendant’s related motion for a new trial.
12 Finally, we hold that the district court did not err in denying defense counsel’s 13 motion to withdraw because counsel’s compliance with the district court’s order 14 compelling production of the video did not create an actual conflict of interest.

15 I. Reasonable Suspicion Supported Defendant’s Detention

16 {11} Defendant maintains the district court erred in concluding Wilson had 17 reasonable suspicion supporting Defendant’s detention in the driveway on Thorpe 18 Road. Defendant first contends that the facts known to Wilson when he departed the 19 DWI checkpoint were insufficient to create reasonable suspicion that Defendant was 20 or had been driving while under the influence. Defendant adds that the insufficiency

1 was compounded when Wilson later lost sight of Defendant and guessed as to his 2 route of travel. The parties agree that Wilson’s investigation of Defendant 3 constituted a seizure under the Fourth Amendment, which must be supported by 4 reasonable suspicion.¹ See State v. Contreras, 2003-NMCA-129, ¶ 5, 134 N.M. 503, 5 79 P.3d 1111.

6 {12} A review of a denial of a motion to suppress presents a mixed question of fact 7 and law. See State v. Lowe, 2004-NMCA-054, ¶ 8, 135 N.M. 520, 90 P.3d 539. We 8 give deference to the district court’s findings of fact, reviewing them for substantial 9 evidence. Id. ¶ 9. We recognize fact-finding frequently requires the drawing and 10 selection of specific inferences, and we indulge all reasonable inferences in support 11 of the district court’s decision. See State v. Jason L., 2000-NMSC-018, ¶ 10, 129 12 N.M. 119, 2 P.3d 856. “Questions of reasonable suspicion are reviewed de novo by 13 looking at the totality of the circumstances to determine whether the detention was 14 justified.” State v. Hubble, 2009-NMSC-014, ¶ 5, 146 N.M. 70, 206 P.3d 579
15 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). We have often explained a police

¹ Whether and at what point Wilson may have seized Defendant in this encounter, given the limited facts before us, is unclear. The parties agreed in contesting Defendant’s motion to suppress that Defendant had been seized as a result of a traffic stop, and they contested only the grounds for the stop. The parties likewise have not addressed on appeal whether and when a seizure was made, and we give the questions no further attention. See, e.g., State v. Garnenez, 2015-NMCA-022, ¶ 15, 344 P.3d 1054 (“We will not address arguments on appeal that were not raised in the brief in chief and have not been properly developed for review.”).

1 officer may detain an individual in investigating potential criminal activity where 2 the officer has formed a reasonable suspicion the individual “is breaking, or has 3 broken, the law.” Id. ¶ 8 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Reasonable 4 suspicion must arise from “specific articulable facts,” along with any “rational 5 inferences that may be drawn from those facts.” Contreras, 2003-NMCA-129, ¶ 5 6 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

7 {13} Our Supreme Court has provided specific guidance in evaluating whether 8 reasonable suspicion may arise based on purportedly evasive driving behavior near 9 a DWI checkpoint. See generally State v. Anaya, 2009-NMSC-043, ¶¶ 11-18, 147
10 N.M. 100, 217 P.3d 586. A legal turn in the vicinity of the checkpoint, for example, 11 will not typically give rise to reasonable suspicion. Id. ¶ 16. As in all cases, however, 12 an officer need not have observed illegal activity to develop reasonable suspicion.
13 Id. ¶ 12. A legal turn observed in combination with other circumstances may well 14 support a reasonable suspicion of criminal activity—particularly where the 15 circumstances suggest the turn is made for the purpose of evading the checkpoint.
16 Id. ¶¶ 15-16. Anaya explained that various considerations may be relevant in 17 discerning the driver’s purpose for engaging in certain observed activity near a 18 checkpoint. Whether the driver is on notice that the checkpoint is looming is clearly 19 relevant in making the determination. Id. ¶ 16. Thus, questions such as whether the 20 driver “was in a position to observe police emergency lights” emanating from the 1 checkpoint and whether the driver could have observed signs announcing the 2 checkpoint may aid in evaluating the purpose underlying the driver's behavior.

3 Id. ¶ 18. Other considerations, such as the time of day, the location of the activity 4 and its proximity to the checkpoint, the nature of the road, and the typicality of the 5 conduct observed may also inform the evaluation. Id. ¶ 17. Evaluation of these and 6 any other relevant circumstances should guide the determination of whether an 7 officer may reasonably believe specific driving behavior constitutes an attempt to 8 evade a checkpoint, which in turn may support a reasonable suspicion the driver is 9 driving while intoxicated. Id. ¶ 16.

10 {14} The district court's findings and associated permissible inferences support a 11 determination of reasonable suspicion here. The district court noted the vehicle had 12 traveled on Camino Real Road past the intersection of Dona Ana School Road in the 13 direction of the checkpoint. Before arriving at the checkpoint, the district court 14 found, the vehicle paused on the shoulder for that period of time notable to Wilson 15 before making its U-turn. Neither of those findings were disputed, and we conclude 16 both were supported by substantial evidence. The district court further found that 17 after making the U-turn, the vehicle accelerated away from the checkpoint and must 18 have maintained "an accelerated speed" as Wilson pursued, so as to maintain its 19 distance ahead. While Defendant questions the basis for this latter finding, the 20 district court was entitled to credit Wilson's observations, and we find no reason to

1 reweigh Wilson’s testimony here. See, e.g., State v. Martinez, 2018-NMSC-007, 2 ¶ 15, 410 P.3d 186 (deferring to district court’s implicit acceptance of testifying 3 officer’s perceptions). Were we to end the analysis there, as Defendant appears to 4 do, whether these findings alone—the location of the turn, the pause, the acceleration 5 away from the checkpoint—supported the requisite reasonable suspicion is 6 debatable. See Anaya, 2009-NMSC-043 ¶¶ 13, 16 (suggesting legal U-turn made in 7 view of checkpoint may require additional circumstances to support reasonable 8 suspicion).

9 {15} Yet the vehicle’s progress past the Dona Ana School Road intersection and its 10 roadside pause, when viewed in conjunction with the testimony regarding the 11 checkpoint’s visibility, the daylight remaining, the absence of any intervening 12 traffic, and the vehicle’s distance from the checkpoint, support inferences that the 13 driver was aware of the checkpoint and tried to evade it. See id. ¶ 18 (“[The 14 d]efendant was in a position to observe police emergency lights and other lights 15 illuminating the checkpoint.”). In addition, Wilson’s testimony regarding traffic 16 patterns that evening suggested the U-turn and subsequent turn onto Dona Ana 17 School Road were abnormal. That abnormality likewise supported inferences that 18 the driver was aware of the checkpoint and sought to evade it. See id. (“[The 19 d]efendant then proceeded in the opposite direction of travel, which was inconsistent 20 with typical driving patterns given the location of the highway.”). Wilson’s

1 testimony regarding the difficulty he had in tracking down the vehicle after he left 2 the checkpoint only served to bolster the inference that the driver was engaging in 3 evasive behavior. Under the totality of these circumstances, we conclude that Wilson 4 had reasonable suspicion that the driver of the maroon vehicle was driving while 5 intoxicated. See id. ¶ 16.

6 {16} Despite the support for those inferences, Defendant makes much of the fact 7 that Wilson lost sight of the vehicle and eventually resorted to his best guess as to 8 where to head next when he reached the intersection of Dona Ana Road and Thorpe 9 Road. When Wilson later came across Defendant standing next to a maroon vehicle 10 in the Thorpe Road driveway, Defendant contends, Wilson could not possibly have 11 had the requisite individualized suspicion with respect to Defendant to support a 12 detention. No doubt an “unsupported intuition” regarding an individual falls short of 13 the “particularized suspicion” necessary to subject the individual to an investigative 14 detention. Jason L., 2000-NMSC-018, ¶ 20. Particularized suspicion must be a 15 suspicion based on all the circumstances known to the officer that the “particular 16 individual” detained is breaking or has broken the law, as distinct from a more 17 generalized suspicion untethered to the individual. See id. Officers, however, need 18 not limit themselves to their direct observations in developing suspicions, and they 19 need not “exclude all possible innocent explanations of the facts and circumstances” 20 they observe. State v. Candelaria, 2011-NMCA-001, ¶ 14, 149 N.M. 125, 245 P.3d

1 69 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see State v. Alderete, 2011-
2 NMCA-055, ¶ 15, 149 N.M. 799, 255 P.3d 377. Instead, they may rely on their own 3 experiences and specialized training to draw inferences and make deductions from 4 the totality of information available to them—inferences and deductions that may 5 well elude the untrained observer. See Alderete, 2011-NMCA-055, ¶ 15; State v.
6 Maez, 2009-NMCA-108, ¶ 23, 147 N.M. 91, 217 P.3d 104.

7 {17} Various facts and inferences supported Wilson’s suspicion regarding 8 Defendant here. Wilson testified about the lack of traffic at the checkpoint. His 9 ability to observe the vehicle and its route of travel at a distance, despite the vehicle’s 10 substantial head start and apparently evasive behavior, reinforced the fact that there 11 were few cars on the road to impede his pursuit or view that evening. That suggested 12 the potential universe of suspects was small, as did the short length of the time that 13 Wilson lost contact with the vehicle. Cf. Commonwealth v. Bostock, 880 N.E.2d 759, 14 764 (Mass. 2008) (finding reasonable suspicion existed where the defendant was 15 found in the vicinity of the alleged crimes within minutes of the crimes, the 16 defendant matched the description given by witnesses, and upon canvass of the area 17 no one else matching the description was found); State v. Lovato, 1991-NMCA-083, 18 ¶ 11, 112 N.M. 517, 817 P.2d 251 (finding reasonable suspicion where “the incident 19 involving the reported shooting occurred around midnight, the car occupied by 20 defendants met the general description radioed by the police dispatcher, and there

1 | was no other vehicular traffic in the area”). And Defendant’s maroon vehicle in the 2 | driveway, close in time and place to the pursuit here, placed him comfortably within
3 | that small population of suspects, strengthening the notion that Wilson’s suspicion
4 | was sufficiently particularized. Cf. United States v. Mosley, 878 F.3d 246, 252 (8th
5 | Cir. 2017) (concluding that, given “the close temporal and physical proximity of the 6 | [vehicle] to the crime, the totality of the circumstances indicates that reasonable 7 | suspicion supported the vehicle stop and rendered it constitutional” (internal
8 | quotation marks and citation omitted)). The district court, thus, was free to credit
9 | Wilson’s testimony that the maroon vehicle he spotted on Thorpe Road was “the 10 | same maroon vehicle” he had pursued from the checkpoint.

11 | {18} Were the brief loss of visual contact by the pursuing officer in this case
12 | sufficient to eliminate reasonable suspicion, as Defendant suggests, this might 13 | condone a constitutional test not only inconsistent with our prior precedent but also 14 | dismissive of the significant risk that fleeing drunk drivers pose to the public. We 15 | long have held that “in determining whether the totality of circumstances gave [the 16 | officer] a reasonable suspicion to stop [the d]efendant, we must balance the possible
17 | threat of drunk driving to the safety of the public with [the d]efendant’s right to be 18 | free from unreasonable seizure.” Contreras, 2003-NMCA-129, ¶ 13. We have
19 | repeatedly acknowledged the “compelling public interest” in eliminating drunk
20 | driving and its deadly consequences. State v. Simpson, 2016-NMCA-070, ¶ 24, 388

1 P.3d 277 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); State v. Nance, 2011-
2 NMCA-048, ¶ 26, 149 N.M. 644, 253 P.3d 934; Contreras, 2003-NMCA-129, ¶ 14.
3 Where, as here, a driver appears to be deliberately evading a DWI checkpoint, giving 4 rise to reasonable suspicion of DWI, and the driver then proceeds to speed away 5 from that checkpoint, posing a substantial danger to others, “the exigency of the 6 possible threat to public safety that a drunk driver poses . . . and the minimal 7 intrusion of a brief investigatory stop tip the balance in favor of the stop[,]” 8 notwithstanding that the pursuing officer lost sight of the fleeing vehicle for a brief 9 period. See Contreras, 2003-NMCA-129, ¶ 21.

10 {19} Given the observations Wilson made at the checkpoint and as he pursued the 11 vehicle, as well as the reasonable inferences he drew under the circumstances, we 12 conclude he had developed reasonable suspicion of DWI and evading an officer and 13 those suspicions were sufficiently particularized with respect to Defendant.
14 Defendant’s detention was therefore reasonable, and the district court did not err in 15 denying Defendant’s motion to suppress.

16 II. The District Court Did Not Err in Compelling Defendant to Produce the 17 State’s Video

18 {20} Turning to the issue of the return of the State’s video, Defendant questions the 19 basis for the district court’s order compelling its production and the associated denial 20 of Defendant’s motion for a new trial. Neither our Rules of Criminal Procedure nor 21 our Rules of Professional Conduct, Defendant observes, provide clear guidance for

1 dealing with the State’s loss of its copy of the video here. Defendant contends that 2 in the absence of clear guidance no legal principle should require a defendant to 3 provide the State with evidence harmful to the defendant’s case.

4 {21} We review discovery rulings for abuse of discretion. See State v. Ortiz, 2009-5 NMCA-092, ¶ 24, 146 N.M. 873, 215 P.3d 811. Abuse of discretion occurs when 6 “the ruling is clearly against the logic and effect of the facts and circumstances of 7 the case.” See State v. Layne, 2008-NMCA-103, ¶ 6, 144 N.M. 574, 189 P.3d 707 8 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). We will determine that an abuse of 9 discretion has occurred only where we can conclude the ruling is “clearly untenable 10 or not justified by reason.” Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). We 11 apply the same standard of review to the district court’s denial of Defendant’s motion 12 for new trial. See State v. Guerra, 2012-NMSC-027, ¶ 18, 284 P.3d 1076.

13 {22} The district court determined that while counsel’s refusal to produce the video 14 “arguably [was] not violative of the rules of discovery,” it “[did] run afoul of the 15 spirit, if not the letter, of Rule 16-304(A) [NMRA] of the Rules of Professional 16 Conduct” and “serve[d] to undermine the truth-finding function of a trial[.]” Rule 17 16-304(A) directs that a “lawyer shall not . . . unlawfully obstruct another party’s 18 access to evidence or unlawfully alter, destroy, or conceal a document or other 19 material having potential evidentiary value[.]” The rule tells us nothing more, 20 however, about what might constitute “unlawful” obstruction or concealment, or

1 whether defense counsel’s failure to voluntarily return the video here might have 2 come within the prohibition. Evaluation of the scope of counsel’s obligation 3 requires, instead, examination of our basic rules governing discovery and procedure.
4 Cf. In re Estrada, 2006-NMSC-047, ¶ 32, 140 N.M. 492, 143 P.3d 731 (per curiam)
5 (noting that discovery rules are designed to ensure “disclos[ure] to the fullest 6 practicable extent” and counsel’s failure to comply with these rules may rise to the 7 level of violating the Rules of Professional Conduct (internal quotation marks and 8 citation omitted)).

9 {23} No one disputes that our discovery rules for criminal cases generally require 10 only that a defendant disclose to the State the evidence he “intends to introduce . . . at 11 the trial.” Rule 5-502(A)(1) NMRA. Whether a district court may compel disclosure 12 of material not explicitly covered by the rules, however, is a different question, and 13 one the rules illuminate further. Rule 5-502, for example, specifies a variety of 14 material for which discovery is not authorized, including reports and documents 15 created by the defense in connection with the case, as well as statements the 16 defendant has made to his agents or attorneys. See Rule 5-502(C). Evidence initially 17 produced by the State and unmodified by the defendant is absent from the list, 18 suggesting it is not subject to the same absolute prohibition. Rule 5-101(B) NMRA 19 adds that our criminal procedure rules are to “be construed to secure simplicity in 20 procedure, fairness in administration and the elimination of unjustifiable expense

1 and delay.” That basic governing principle suggests a district court retains some 2 flexibility in crafting solutions for situations not expressly contemplated by the rules.
3 See Piña v. Espinosa, 2001-NMCA-055, ¶ 28, 130 N.M. 661, 29 P.3d 1062
4 (providing the same in the context of the Rules of Civil Procedure); cf. State v. Le 5 Mier, 2017-NMSC-017, ¶ 18, 394 P.3d 959. (“[T]rial courts shoulder the significant 6 and important responsibility of ensuring the efficient administration of justice in the 7 matters over which they preside[.]”).

8 {24} Defendant makes no reference to these provisions; he instead suggests that a 9 defendant should never be required to turn over “harmful” evidence to the State in 10 the absence of an explicit disclosure requirement. Our Supreme Court, however, has 11 long held that the Rules of Criminal Procedure “provide for reciprocal discovery 12 rights and are intended to provide ample opportunity for investigation of facts.” State 13 v. Stills, 1998-NMSC-009, ¶ 52, 125 N.M. 66, 957 P.2d 51 (internal quotation marks 14 and citation omitted); see also United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 709 (1974) 15 (“The need to develop all relevant facts in the adversary system is both fundamental 16 and comprehensive.”). And while this opportunity for investigation will yield to 17 various privileges and protections, Defendant here has identified no potentially 18 applicable protections whatsoever. See Albuquerque Rape Crisis Ctr. v. Blackmer, 19 2005-NMSC-032, ¶ 18, 138 N.M. 398, 120 P.3d 820 (recognizing “‘the ancient 20 proposition of law’ that ‘the public has a right to every man’s evidence, except for

1 those persons protected by a constitutional, common-law, or statutory privilege” 2 (omission omitted) (quoting Nixon, 418 U.S. at 709)).

3 {25} While we have no obligation to guess at what Defendant’s arguments might 4 be, we observe that Defendant’s reproduction of the State’s video in this case does 5 not appear to implicate Defendant’s rights or privileges. See Elane Photography, 6 LLC v. Willock, 2013-NMSC-040, ¶ 70, 309 P.3d 53 (“We will not . . . guess at what 7 a party’s arguments might be.” (alteration, internal quotation marks, and citation 8 omitted)). Indeed, other jurisdictions facing the same situation have concluded that 9 a defendant is required to return video evidence initially disclosed by the 10 government. See Commonwealth v. Tahlil, 94 N.E.3d 840, 842 (Mass. 2018) 11 (holding that the trial court erred in not ordering the defendant to return video 12 originally disclosed by the prosecution); Adams v. State, 969 S.W.2d 106, 114 (Tex.
13 Ct. App. 1998) (holding that the district court did not err in compelling the defendant 14 to return videotape of field sobriety test after the state lost original).

15 {26} These courts have determined that production of such evidence does not 16 implicate a defendant’s right to be free from self-incrimination or the attorney-client 17 or work product privileges. See, e.g., Tahlil, 94 N.E.3d at 842 (“Providing a copy of 18 the DVD to the [prosecution] . . . would not be an incriminating admission[.] . . . It 19 would merely be the act of the defendant returning to the [prosecution] a copy of 20 something that the [prosecution] provided to him in the first place.”); Adams, 969

1 S.W.2d at 114 (rejecting “[t]he notion that information which is tendered as a result 2 of court ordered or statutorily mandated discovery, can be converted into privileged 3 information, though it has not been altered since tendering, enhanced by fruits of an 4 attorney’s labor since tendering, or added to with communicative actions after 5 tendering”). Instead, these courts have concluded that the video evidence initially 6 developed and produced by the government was returnable, largely because it was 7 the government’s evidence to begin with. See, e.g., Adams, 969 S.W.2d at 114 (“The 8 tape is a recording of an event made by the [s]tate and disclosed to the defense as 9 part of statutory pretrial discovery.”); see also Tahlil, 94 N.E.3d at 842 n.3 (“[I]t is 10 exactly this point—that the evidence was once in the [prosecutor’s] possession, and 11 that the [prosecutor] gave it to the defendant—that is relevant and dispositive.”); 12 accord United States v. Province, 45 M.J. 359, 363 (C.A.A.F. 1996) (“[H]ad the 13 [g]overnment asked the defense for a copy of th[e] document, alleging that their 14 copy had been lost or destroyed, then defense counsel would have been obligated to 15 turn [it] over[.]”).

16 {27} We find these cases persuasive, and they guide our analysis here. The video 17 at issue was the State’s evidence, produced in compliance with its discovery 18 obligations. Because the video originated with the State and remained unaltered by 19 the defense, it appears no constitutional, statutory, or common law prohibition on 20 disclosure applied. In the absence of an identified prohibition or protection, the 1 district court was entitled to resolve the dispute with an eye toward promoting 2 “fairness in administration and the elimination of unjustifiable . . . delay” as 3 contemplated by the rules. See Rule 5-101(B). In short, fairness, expediency, and the 4 absence of an identified prohibition or protection all counseled in favor of production 5 here, regardless whether Rule 16-304(A) required it. Cf. State v. Wasson, 1998-

6 NMCA-087, ¶ 16, 125 N.M. 656, 964 P.2d 820 (“[W]e may affirm the district 7 court’s order on grounds not relied upon by the district court if those grounds do not 8 require us to look beyond the factual allegations that were raised and considered 9 below.”). We thus cannot say that the district court erred in compelling Defendant
10 to return to the State a copy of the video the State had initially provided, and as a 11 result, we affirm the district court’s denial of Defendant’s motion for a new trial.
12 See, e.g., State v. Stephens, 1982-NMSC-128, ¶ 15, 99 N.M. 32, 653 P.2d 863 13 (concluding new trial was unwarranted where no error was identified).

14 III. No Conflict Arose as a Result of the District Court’s Order Compelling 15 Production

16 {28} Defendant argues that his compelled production of the video created a conflict 17 on the ground that defense counsel’s duty as an officer of the court had, at that point, 18 triumphed over her duty as an advocate for Defendant. Defendant maintains that he 19 was entitled to counsel having undivided loyalty and, thus, the district court’s failure 20 to allow counsel to withdraw was error.

1 {29} Claims of conflict of interest and the related question of whether a defendant 2 is entitled to any presumption of prejudice as a result of a conflict are reviewed de 3 novo. See State v. Vincent, 2005-NMCA-064, ¶ 4, 137 N.M. 462, 112 P.3d 1119. A 4 presumption is applicable only where the record reveals “an actual, active conflict 5 that adversely affects counsel’s trial performance[.]” Id. We have long recognized 6 the Sixth Amendment guarantees a defendant the right to counsel of undivided 7 loyalty, free from conflicts of interest. See State v. Santillanes, 1990-NMCA-035, 8 ¶ 1, 109 N.M. 781, 790 P.2d 1062. While the typical conflict arises in cases 9 involving multiple representation, a conflict may also arise in any case where “the 10 interests of the client and the attorney diverge.” See State v. Martinez, 2001-NMCA-11 059, ¶ 25, 130 N.M. 744, 31 P.3d 1018. That proposition is restated slightly in our 12 Rules of Professional Conduct, which direct that “a lawyer shall not represent a 13 client if the representation [of that client may be] . . . materially limited by the 14 lawyer’s responsibilities to . . . a third person or by a personal interest of the lawyer.”
15 Rule 16-107(A)(2) NMRA.

16 {30} We have previously found various considerations to be relevant to our 17 determination of whether a defendant can establish the requisite divergence of 18 interest or material limitation in his counsel’s representation. Where a lawyer is 19 implicated in the same criminal enterprise as the defendant, for example, we have 20 noted a conflict will arise because the “lawyer’s need for self-preservation will trump

1 the duties of representation owed to the client.” Martinez, 2001-NMCA-059, ¶ 25.

2 We also have concluded representation may be impermissibly limited and a conflict 3 may arise where counsel would have pursued “some plausible defense” strategy but 4 avoided it because it would have been “damaging to another’s interest.” Santillanes, 5 1990-NMCA-035, ¶ 7; see also State v. Sosa, 1997-NMSC-032, ¶ 22, 123 N.M. 564, 6 943 P.2d 1017 (“[The defendant’s] fail[ure] to prove that [counsel] . . . was forced 7 to abandon the defenses of diminished capacity or duress in order to protect 8 [another] . . . [was] not sufficient to establish an actual conflict of interest.”).

9 {31} Defendant here does not rely on these principles. He instead suggests the 10 district court’s order compelling production of the video—and the ensuing 11 possibility of contempt for failure to comply—impermissibly limited his counsel’s 12 loyalty, as his counsel was faced with the unpalatable choice between contempt and 13 weakening her client’s case. New Mexico courts, however, as well as courts 14 elsewhere, have recognized the lawyer’s duties to the client are often, and properly, 15 circumscribed by the lawyer’s duties to the court and the administration of justice.
16 See, e.g., In re Howes, 1997-NMSC-024, ¶ 20, 123 N.M. 311, 940 P.2d 159 (“[In] 17 the end, each member of the bar is an officer of the court. His or her first duty is not 18 to the client or the senior partner, but to the administration of justice.” (internal 19 quotation marks and citation omitted)); see also State v. Kruchten, 417 P.2d 510, 20 515 (Ariz. 1966) (“The duty of an attorney to a client, whether in a private or

1 criminal proceeding, is subordinate to his responsibility for the due and proper
2 administration of justice.”); Commonwealth v. Holliday, 882 N.E.2d 309, 320-21
3 (Mass. 2008) (“[A] lawyer’s duty to advance the interests of his client are properly 4 limited by his duty to comply with court rules.”). Put another way, failure to comply 5 with obligations to the court constitutes not the “zealous advocacy” our adversarial 6 system requires, but violates “professional obligations to the system of justice itself.” 7 Estrada, 2006-NMSC-047, ¶ 32. Compliance with these obligations, particularly in 8 the absence of error by the court, generally gives rise to no conflict. See, e.g., 9 Holliday, 882 N.E.2d at 320-21; cf. Nix v. Whiteside, 475 U.S. 157, 176 (1986) 10 (highlighting the “problems” and “volumes of litigation” that might be “spawned” 11 by any rule recognizing a conflict between duty of loyalty to the client and ethical 12 obligations to the court).

13 {32} We already have concluded here that the district court did not abuse its 14 discretion when it ordered Defendant to return the video provided by the State.
15 Counsel’s duty to comply with that order thus presented no conflict, and Defendant 16 has not established any “actual, active conflict,” impairing his counsel’s 17 performance at trial. See Martinez, 2001-NMCA-059, ¶ 24. As a result, we cannot 18 conclude the district court erred in denying defense counsel’s motion to withdraw.

1 CONCLUSION

2 {33} We affirm the district court's denials of Defendant's motion to suppress, 3 Defendant's motion for a new trial, and defense counsel's motion to withdraw.
